PENDING SUGAR BILL CONTAINS AN ALLEGED JOKER

The "Gator" is the name of a magazine published in Washington, D. C., by W. L. Bass, the June number of which has just been received. Its emblem is an alligator, and its motto, "Pro cane sugar vs. beet sugar." The following quotations appear on the title page:

"The struggle between beet sugar and cane sugar is perpetual."—Senator A. B. Cummins, May 27, 1909.

"Until the American flag covers more tropical soil."—Gator.

This legend under the emblem mentioned heads the first page of the number in hand.

The "Gator" is dedicated to the men who, "neath the tropic moon and sun, are far removed from Washington, D. C."

A large portion of the 120 pages of the magazine consists of correspondence between the publisher, Mr. Bass, and statesmen in Washington, together with extracts from public documents, all to show the tactics of the refining interests, in alleged alliance with the beet sugar interests, with the purpose of preventing the marketing of any cane sugar except through the sugar refiners. Another cause that seems to be advocated by the "Gator" is that of the annexation of tropical countries to the south of the United States.

The chief aim of the June number is to show that the Lodge bill, or the compromise measure hung up in Congress, while abolishing the Dutch standard, substitutes a branding provision that has practically the same effect—namely, placing all cane sugars at the mercy of the refiners.

"Let us see what the bill is," says a leaflet inserted in the magazine.

"Per hundred pounds, beginning at 75 degrees it stipulates an import duty of $0.95 (the same as the present law) and for each added degree $0.026 per degree. (Existing law stipulates $0.035.)

"No color stipulation regarding classification, or, in other words, no Dutch Standard clause.

"Nothing added in connection with any protection for refining.

"All sugars under 99 per cent, grade to have packages branded to within half a per cent., subject to severe penalties.

"No branding required on sugars, both domestic or foreign. Made for or 'Consigned to' any sugar melting plant.

"Sugars over 99 per cent, grade, both refined cane and high grade unrefined beet sugar (such as made in the United States), are exempt from the necessity of any branding. Refined sugars under 99 per cent, grade to have packages branded."

Other inserts found within the magazine as it reached the Star-Bulletin are clippings from the Washington Herald and Times, the latter one of Munsey's papers, which explain the motive of the fight better than any equal amount of matter in the pages of the "Gator" itself. The following is an editorial in the Washington Times of August 1, which puts the case as clearly as may be:

A New Joker in The Sugar Bill.
